1. A Soviet government representative stated [REDACTED] "We disliked Tito even more than we disliked the West. The battle against him was on a more concentrated ideological level than any anti-Communist Westerner could realize. However, we have decided that it is in the interest of everyone to adopt a friendly attitude toward Tito and toward other countries."
2. Discussing Germany, the same official said that there must be a conference. He knew that the West would insist on postponing the conference until after the ratification of the London agreements, and conceded that this delay would have to be accepted, but repeated that the talks should be held.
